Advanced Manufacturing Jobs and Innovation Accelerator Challenge to Help Strengthen Advanced Manufacturing and Clusters Across the Nation

This article originally ran in the 5/31/12 issue of Area Development Online's newsletter, "Site and Facility Planning".

Acting Assistant Secretary of Commerce for Economic Development Matt Erskine today joined U.S. Small Business Administration Associate Administrator for Entrepreneurial Development Michael Chodos, U.S. Department of Labor Deputy Assistant Secretary of Employment and Training Gerri Fiala, National Science Foundation Division Director for Industrial Innovation and Partnerships Grace Wang, and National Institute of Standards and Technology Associate Director for Innovation and Industry Services Phil Singerman in hosting a teleconference to unveil the $26 million Advanced Manufacturing Jobs and Innovation Accelerator Challenge, a multiagency competition to strengthen advanced manufacturing and clusters and to create jobs across the nation.

"Advanced manufacturing is critical to the health of the national economy and provides essential goods and equipment directly to consumers as well as to a wide range of industries," said Acting Assistant Secretary Erskine. "This competition will help foster innovation-fueled job creation through public-private partnerships that catalyze and leverage private capital, build entrepreneurial ecosystems, and promote cluster-based development in regions across the United States."

Approximately 12 projects are expected to be chosen through a competitive interagency grant process. The deadline for applications is July 9, 2012, and guidelines for submissions are accessible here.
